Ortie Baker has installed a Delco lighting system in his pool room and is tickled all over with the success of the affair. Secin' as how the exhaust plays hob with the atmosphere in The Press office, we will refrain from saying what we think about it till some future time.

The Holden blacksmith shop will soon be ready for accupation,

Brush manipulator Snowden has erected a large sign on the Central Garage.

Mrs. Tibert and children are in Lethbridge for the week.

The I. O. O. F. lodge have also secured the services of Butler's Orchestra, of Vulcan, to play at their first annual ball on March 16th.

Jas. Marshall arrived a week ago tonight with a car of Saskatchewan draft horses for the local market.

Good music may not be entirely responsible for the success of a dance, but it surely lends material aid in providing real pleasure while dancing. The committee in charge of the dance on Wednesday are to be congratulated upon their efforts. They made the venture of bringing Butler's orchestra over from Vulcan for this occasion, and that their efforts were appreciated is but to put it mildly. The music was excellent, the crowd was of fair size and everyone went away feeling that he had received value for his money. The Red Cross ladies provided the lunch and the surplus funds handed over to them amounted to near $20.00

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Doane have moved into their new home although the building is not entirely completed. Mr. and Mrs. F. O. Cox are moving into Lomond and into their building just vacated by Mr. and Mrs. Doane. Mr. Cox's sale on Wednesday drew a large crowd and the goods and chattels brought the owner a very neat figure.

The regular meeting of the Red Cross Society will be held in the church at 3 o'clock Wednesday next, March 7th. All ladies are invited to attend. The monthly tea for the Red Cross will be served at Mrs. Crum's cafe, Saturday, March 10th. There will also be a sale of home-made cooking, etc., everyone invited to attend and help on a good cause.

Geo. Hodgins and family have returned to Lomond after spending the winter in the East.

Mrs. Robt. Bell and Mr. and Mrs. Clark have returned from Winnipeg, where they spent the winter visiting with relatives and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Glen Ficht and little son, of Midway, are home again, having spent the winter in the eastern States and Prince Edward Island. A. Volesky is also back again, but came back alone.

Thomas A. Edison Airs His Views

There is no private American citizen whom the people of the United States are prouder of than Thomas Alva Edison, the inventor. The fact that he has not up to the present time definitely declared himself upon the issue raised by the war, and that he and Henry Ford have been photographed together has conveyed the impression that he is a neutral or a pacifist, who believes one of the belligerents is as bad as another. A long interview with Mr. Edison which appeared in the New York Sun dissipates that idea. Mr. Edison is definitely pro-Ally and anti-German. Of France he says: "To me the war has proved that France is the banner nation of the world. To my mind the French are proving themselves to be the real people of the world, the most splendid people, perhaps, that the world has ever known, for they are combining wonderful efficiency with an absolute devotion which raises to heights of almost fanatical self-sacrifice."

Edison is not so unreserved in his praise of the British people. He is not blind to their faults any more than the British people are blind to the faults of Americans, and "this means pretty good eyesight." If it had not been for this war Mr. Edison thinks the British people would soon have been lost beyond redemption. Germany has saved them. Germany has given England a soul. What saved England from becoming like Germany, and what will always save her, he says, is one significant omission from her educational system, otherwise greatly inferior to that of Germany. "Nowhere were Englishmen instructed in the Divine right of kings," he says "everywhere they were and are instructed in the inalienable right of the individual to work out his own destiny so long as in so doing he does not interfere with the similar rights of other individuals." The Germans failed to understand the British character. They wrote more and knew less about psychology than any race on earth. They thought British too slow, too sodden, to get into the war before Belgium had been stolen, France defeated and Russia checked.

Drink, Mr. Edison believes, was at the bottom of most of Britain's failures before the war. The workers were kept sodden and were more easily exploited by the wealthy classes. There was general aversion to machinery, and therefore Britain was falling behind in the race of commercial supremacy. Mr. Edison continues: "But though the Englishman is slow, when he starts he can't be stopped. He is heavy. Momentum will carry him much farther than it will the Germans or the French or the Americans. It has been this which has made everyone but the stupid, arrogant and king-ridden German militarists realize that England is now as dangerous to the aggressor as she ever was."

Edison believes that the war has finally solved many problems for the British Empire. It has drawn her colonies and self-governing dominions together in indissoluble bonds. It has solved the woman suffrage problem, for he assumes that women will be granted the vote in recognition of what they have done in the war. Never again will there be the old low wages, although there undoubtedly be a decrease from the present war rates. No more will there be a prejudice against labor-saving machinery, and great temperance reforms are to be expected. Of sea power he has this to say:

"British sea power has been a good thing for the the United States. It has been as valuable to us as it has to Britain. It has been valuable to all mankind, including the very nations that are fighting against it.

The great inventor said that as far as the future was concerned he did not believe any definite "understanding" would be necessary between Great Britain and the United States, because to all intents and purposes the people of the British dominions are "Americans." In the sympathy and convictions of the two people there is already a treaty more binding than anything that could be put on paper. "I believe," he said, "that every really good American realizes the fact

W. A. Teskey, Ford agent, reports the following sales for last week: Adolf Blank, Ray Hornberger, John Magnusson and Ed. Hoffman.

A queer accident happened north of Lomond a couple of weeks ago which was quite a costly one to Messrs. C. M. Holo and Harry Tawse. Their cattle were grazing on the range and going up to Hallwrights barn for shelter broke through the covering on an old root cellar and nine head fell in, five of them dying and the remaining four being in a state of exhaustion when found but with good care have been brought around again all right.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert McFall returned on Tuesday from their winter's trip to Ontario.

Smith & Moran reports the following bookings for small tractors:— 15-30 Titan, 24-42 Goodison separator, 4-bottom independent power lift Sattely engine gang to Messrs. H. Wilcox, J. R. Shearer, Leo Herman and John Ward; 10-20 Titan and plows to Bert Bell; 10-20 Titan and plows to F. B. McFarland; 10-20 Titan and plows to C. B. Storms; 10-20 Titan and plows to Bert Gage; 10-20 Titan to Robt. Plunkett and a 10-20 Titan to "Hardy" Anderberg.

Chas. Adams has his new garage all in readiness for the first shipment of McLaughlins to the Lomond agency.

Mr. and Mrs. O. R. Olson are home again after a winter's holiday spent in Minnesota.

The council of the Rural Municipality of Clifton will meet in Lomond on Monday, March 12th.

Dr. Riddell to Preach on Eyremore Circuit

that Britain and France are fighting our battles, and I think that those who do not believe this are not good Americans or are very ill-informed Americans." Personally, he expressed his humulation that the American people have not been able to do more for the Allies. A powerful American navy would, he believes, have prevented most of Germany's naval outrages. While not wishing to violate Washington's injunction about "entangling alliances," he was convinced that the United States would have to take her stand with the Allies after this war in order to prevent future world conflagrations.

LOMOND, MARCH 2, 1917.

Those of you who have received price lists of printing this week from city firms will find upon their perusal that your own home town establishment is at least meeting their prices and in a great many instances quoting a lower figure. We fully realize that price is not the only consideration in printing. The Press is equipped with the most modern cuttings of type and knows how to use them to give the customer value for his money. We have catered to a very satisfactory patronage in job printing since establishing the plant in Lomond and believe we have the full confidence of our customers in handling their numerous requirements.

A return of the old real estate game is being experienced in Alberta, with farm lands as a medium of exploitation. There is a good market for lands with a large percentage of summerfallow and buying is inclined to be conservative. Fortunately there is hardly the opening for wild cat schemes that was made possible under the town lot craze.

We must admit that lands around Lomond do not appear to be selling at an exceptionally high figure in view of what the land has demonstrated in production, but the war scare is keeping many would-be buyers out of Canada from the States, and this class of purchaser usually has the money in his pocket.

A petition is being circulated in all the towns along this line asking for an improved train and mail service. We would suggest that you go out of your way to sign the document. It seems queer that the people have been content with such services so long. Getting mail but twice a week is an absurdity in towns where business of such extent is carried on as along this line, and the passenger service is simply a joke—think of an up-to-date railway company asking passengers to sit from seven in the morning to seven at night to cover a journey of a hundred miles. An average speed of eight miles an hour. It is little to be wondered at that people go to the extra expense of hiring motor cars, rather than make this trip on the train.

The Press contends that a line that produces the revenue this one does, is entitled to a respectable passenger service.

Following up the conclusion of the public meeting held some little time ago, the village council has placed an order for thirty fire extinguishers with the Gutta Percha & Rubber Co.

Those longing for the early opening of spring have been compelled to contend with another severe spell of winter. Snow has fallen to a considerable depth and those with sleighs have found themselves to be in real luck.

Wheat appears to be on the use again, street price being $1.57 to-day.

A sneer twisted her lips.

"Only money could do that!"

Andrew's comment was instant:

"Then give it to him."

She answered hopelessly.

"It would take a great deal of money to get him to go away without theft from a house like this. When I met him first I didn't know the sort of man he was. I learned afterward. They talked about him in the reformatory. He has a good reputation—among criminals.

Andrew drew a bill case from his pocket.

"I have here," he said, "just a little less than $5,000. That should suffice."

The girl shrank back.

"I am afraid!" she whispered.

"Think!" the Master Mind command- ed, with a note of sternness. "Think what depends upon it." His voice dropped. "Lucene, if you do not fail tonight your troubles will be over." She shook her head slowly in dreary negation.

"No," she answered forlornly, "they will never be over. I have learned the lesson at last. You were wrong in what you tried to teach me. I know it now, when it is too late. I should have followed my conscience." She threw herself back and sat huddled in utter dejection. "It would have been better," she murmured brokenly, almost inaudibly, "better for Cortland and me, if we had never met again."

The Master Mind perceived that for the time being her feeling had carried her beyond his control. He waited patiently until the violence of her grief should have spent itself. Then after a time he assailed her ruthlessly from a new point of attack. The very diffi- culty of his task provoked him to harsher endeavor, unweakened by sym- pathy.

"Lucene," he said earnestly, "if it were to become necessary in order to save your husband from public dis- grace you would be willing to do some- thing otherwise wholly repulsive to your every instinct, would you not?" The girl opened her eyes and looked up at him with a new questioning of dread in her gaze. "If there were no other way to save him from disgrace you would even pretend to go away with this fellow Creegan, wouldn't you?" There was a long pause, in which she continued to stare at him with an ever increasing horror as a vague understanding of his meaning crept into her consciousness. "Wouldn't you? I mean if it should be absolutely necessary in order to stop Creegan's mouth. Why, with ten words to the newspaper reporters about you and the Blounts he could ruin your husband's whole political career. Think, Lucene! Is your love strong enough to rise to that supreme height of martyrdom wherein you would not only sacrifice yourself in silence, but so blacken your character that he would gladly let you go? Is your love so strong, Lucene?"

There was no answer. The distract- ed girl remained cowering under a crushing weight of horror. And yet, despite the despair that flamed in her breast, some secret prompting stirred her toward acquiescence. That single word "martyrdom" had set her spirit fermenting for sacrifice. In the heart of her was the eternal yearning of the woman to give where she loved, the maternal instinct of total self abnega- tion for the sake of the one beloved, the willingness to yield all, to suffer all, to dare all, to live or die for that be- loved's good. Subconsciously, already she realized the truth that she would at last accept the martyrdom thrust on her by hideous fate—accept it for his sake.

And finally she spoke, very softly, gaspingly, as one wholly spent. "To save him from disgrace—yes, even that."

Andrew persisted.

"You would not falter?"

The Card Was Black.

The leaden voice came:

"No, I am sure."

Then, at last, the Master Mind per- mitted himself the luxury of a doubt- ful comforting.

"It may be," he said gently, "that this supreme sacrifice will not be nec- essary. But if it should be—well, here is the money."

Again he held forth the sheaf of bills, and now the girl put out a lan- guid hand, took them, and hid them in her bosom, her face masque-like in its misery. "As nearly as I have been able to learn," Andrew continued, in a brisker voice, "Creegan will make his attempt here about 2 o'clock tomor- row morning. Of course, he will come directly to this room, as he has doubt- less acquainted himself with the gen- eral plan of the house and knows that the safe is in this alcove. You will meet him here when he comes."

"Yes." The word was spoken in a lifeless tone.

Nothing mattered now. She went from the room slowly, with dragging steps.

For a long time after Lucene was gone from the library Andrew stood as she had left him, with moody eyes staring unseeing into space, and the in- tensity of his emotion was shown in the harsh grimness of his face.

But at last that expression vanished in an instant. In place of it there was revealed a malignant exultation fright- ful to see. The black hate of him glowed from his face, burned cruelly from his eyes. He hurried stealthily to the large table where was lying a book he had seen Wainwright reading often, a book of love poems.

The Master Mind took from an inner pocket a card of pasteboard, blank, which he placed between the leaves of the book, in such fashion that it pro- truded noticeably, and so left it lying there. For a long minute he stood look- ing down in sinister gloating; then, with a sardonic chuckle, he turned and went out.

The card was black.

Marshall, the Pinkerton detective en- gaged by Wainwright to ferret out the mystery of the cards by tracing them to their source, had wholly failed in accomplishing anything whatever in that direction.

Tonight he had come to the mansion under the guise of a participant in Wainwright's campaign work, as he had done frequently hitherto, in order yet once again to review with his prin- cipal the facts of the case in a final desperate hope of chancing on some neglected item that might suffice as a clew to definite information.

"Well, what do you think of it?" Wainwright demanded in his library.

The detective's face, too, indicated a like depression of spirit.

"Might as well be frank," he said reluctantly. "I must confess, Mr. Wainwright, that this thing has got me stumped."

"Can't we get any help from the post- office inspectors?" Wainwright sug- gested.

"They've been doing what they could," Marshall replied, "but they haven't got anything yet."

"It's been two months now since the coming of the red card," Wainwright mused.

"The longer the better!" the detec- tive exclaimed energetically. "It's be- ginning to look to me as if the chap's nerve might be petering—as if you'd never get that black card, the one to mean real business. Take it from me, Mr. Wainwright, it's just one of those cranks that are always annoying pub- lic men. Why, it stands to reason when you come to think of it. You see, the sender of those mysterious cards claimed to be Henry Allen's brother. Well, now, that fits in with my theory, because nobody ever heard of Henry Allen's brother at any other time. If there really had been such a brother he would have appeared to aid Henry at the time of the trial."

Wainwright was not in the least convinced. He remembered the fact that the unknown enemy had in fact used every endeavor in Henry Allen's behalf before the trial and throughout its course.

Marshall, content that his theory had proved acceptable, changed to another phase of the subject.

"And as I remember you got the warning red card the next day after your nomination for governor."

"Well?"

"Perhaps there's nothing significant in that fact," the detective admitted; "but I wanted to verify my memory. Now there's one other thing I must speak of." Marshall hesitated, with evident embarrassment. "It's a deli- cate point to touch on with a man," he explained, "but I've got to do it."

Wainwright nodded consent.

"It's about your wife," the detective declared constrainedly. "She's worried about something."

For a moment stern displeasure flashed from Wainwright's clear gray eyes; then the expression died as swiftly.

"Ah, you've noticed that," he ex- claimed. A troubled frown bent his brows. "Yes," he said dully, at last, "it would seem so, perhaps, I, too, have noticed—something."

"Have you ever told her about the cards?" Marshall inquired.

"I did not wish to worry her."

"Have you questioned her?"

"Yes, I shall not tell you precisely what answer she made. It would have no bearing. It is enough for you to know that it was merely a pretty little sentimental reason—one that seemed natural enough too."

"Well, we still seem to have nothing definite to go on," the detective grum- bled. "Anyhow, I'm much inclined to believe the thing is actually, done with."

Wainwright moved uneasily in his chair and dropped one hand carelessly on the table beside which he sat. His fingers touched the book of poems from which he had been reading re- cently. He picked up the volume idly. "Then, you really think," he continued listlessly, "that the gentleman who sends the cards is just a harmless crank?"

"Yes," Marshall said confidently. "I think that's really just about the size of this enemy of yours. It's been somebody masquerading as the Master Mind. The chap will never go any further." Wainwright listened courteously, but the detective's words carried no conviction to him. He was reflecting on the fact that an ordinary harmless lunatic would be little likely to display the ingenuity and the resource and the pertinacity that had characterized his enemy in the matter of following him everywhere with the cryptic cards. The timing of the sending of the cards, one to reach him at the time of his triumph of love, another at the time of his triumph of ambition, was enough to proclaim the diabolical cunning of his foe and to augur ill of his abilities for the future. At the thought of the red card Wainwright moved nervously. The fingers that gripped the book closed tightly on it. In the movement their tips touched something that projected beyond the leaves. Mechanically, without any curiosity whatsoever, he glanced down. Then, very slowly, he stiffened in his chair, staring fixedly toward the volume. His face lost its clear coloring and swiftly showed a dull pallor and set in new lines—lines of dread. "Why," Marshall continued, "I once knew a very similar case, in which"—He halted his speech abruptly, for he had chanced to look up at the man opposite him and was astounded. "Good God!" he cried. "What's the matter, man?"

Wainwright made no answer in words; only raised the book and drew forth from between the leaves a blank black card and rested motionless, holding it stiffly in front of him.

Canada's Productivity

The Winnipeg Free Press, in an exhaustive tabulation of market returns for Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta for 1916, says that the value of live stock and dairy products and the first four months of the grain crop of these provinces totalled $258,010,681. For 1915 it gives a comparative figure of $254,162,954, and for 1914 of $140,609,535.

It is stated that 97,000,000 bushels of wheat has passed Winnipeg of the 1916 crop. Oats, barley and flax inspected there had a value of over $10,000,000 higher than for the same month of the previous year.

It is estimated that 33,000,000 bushels of wheat remained in interior elevators at the close of the year.

The year's grand total is made up as follows, according to the Free Press: Wheat, $161,389,955; oats, $22,135,625; barley, $6,991,197; flax, $6,851,862; dairy products, $12,728,614; Winnipeg stockyards, $19,346,373; Calgary yards, $10,110,770; Edmonton yards (three months), $619,251; hay, potatoes and roots, $17,938,000.

Travers Notes

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hunter and Jay Ricketts have returned from the South. All glad to get back to Sunny Alberta. Harold says the south is a nice place to live but Alberta is the place to make money.

Mr. Herm Halden has been recuperating in the country for the last few days. Hope his cold and cough will be better when he returns.

Mr. Bannister has enlarged his place of business. He has taken over the blacksmith shop of Mr. Hewstead's, and remodeled it and has a nice show of fanning mills and buggies ready for the spring trade.

Travers Board of Trade appointed new officers at the last meeting. Mr. Wright, manager for the Purcell store, President, and Mr. St. John, manager of the Standard Bank, secretary-treasurer.

The only way to have a good town is to have good live business men who meet you with a smile, and we sure have them in Travers.

Miss Lysing, of Camrose, has accepted the position as book keeper and telephone operator for Mr. Ulrich. We have a first class phone service now.

Farms are changing hands in this district—thirty and thirty-five dollars per acre. We notice G. G. Elliott, our auctioneer, has several big auction sales for this month.

Travers is still on the map although our correspondent has not been doing his duties the last few weeks. The weather has been cold, but we notice our merchants are all busy. A number of our young men have decided that they have been bachelors long enough. Our genial friends, Dick Clements, Webb Bride and Harry Witting, it is rumored have done the grand and noble act. Expect Dan to be the next. Congratulations, boys!

LOST

About four weeks ago, greyish-brown collie dog, medium size, ten months old. Reward. Will anyone finding please return to Gold Coin Schoolhouse, near Travers.
